"Watch me," said Nelson in a low tone.

"and you'll see some fun." With this parting caution he stepped up tot performan behind the man, gave him a sharp slap on the shoulder and shouled: "Strike!" Instantly the Frenchman drove his right fist against the clerk's writing desk, splitting the board that formed one end of it wide open. The blow barked every knuckle on his hand, but he had hardly turned round to face his Svengall when Nelson again shouted: "Jump!" The effect was marvelous. Big as was, the woodsman went up in the air as high as the counter. He seemed thoroughly meancrized, and when Nelson ceased his commands he looked as sheepish as a hashful schoolgirt. "They are the greatest curiosities I ever paw," said Nelson, "Take them unawares and they will do anything you tell them to. Just before the gange went into the woods last fall we had one here that was a corker. He staggered in with a skate on one afternoon, looked around, and seeing no one in the billard room sneaked in there. The clerk was watching him. The moment he got inside he pulled a long necker from his pocket and was just tipping it up for a drink when the clerk rushed in and velled: "'Throw it!" "He banged it to the floor as if the contents had scorched him. The bottle was smashed, and he glared at the clerk like a wild beast. As a usual thing, they don't get mad, but when they're drinking it's just as well to let them get a swig before yelling 'throw' or drop it.

A logging camp or drive without its jumper would be like a certain play without the principal character. The nervousness that plays such a part in stealing the will power seems to be a peculiarity of the French Canadian. A child showing this sport making quality is at once beset by all his companions, who never fail to work him for the full limit of fun. Those so afflicted become so accustomed to obeying a startling command that they never out grow it. Care, though, is observed in logging camps to see what the jumpers have in hand before any one yells "throw." They will sling ax, knife or anything when the word is given, and there are in stances where the termenters have suffered serious injury. On the Kennebec drive last year the rivermen had a jumper among them who

Electric Light Test. The public is becoming quite knowing in many branches of electric knowledge, and in none more than in the determination, with greater or less accuracy, of the efficiency of the electric light, At one time a ceptral station had no great difficulty in foisting upon its customers as a 16 candle power a light that the ordinary gas jet would be an improvement upon. Now, however, people are more critical, and they have a very shrewd idea as to whether they are gotting as much light as they are paying for. CLOSING SCENES OF THE WAR.

In the latter part of the month March, 1865, Washington saw many signs of collapse of the rebellion. Food Tin Cans. In a recent government report by Dr. H. W. Wilev it is stated that in Germany the law requires that the tins employed for holding canned goods shall not contain more than 1 per cent of lead, while in this country there is no restriction whatever in regard to the character of the tin used, the result of this latter fact being the employment of cans in some cases containing as high as 12 per cent of lead. This practice prevails, notwithstanding the unanimity among physiologists as to the effect of lead salts upon the human system, the continual ingestion of even minute quantities of lead into the system being followed quences—painter's collo, lead palsy and such minute portions of lead salts. It is said to be possible to exclude the latter by requiring that the tin shall not contain more than, say, 11g per cent of lead; also that the solder be as free! from lead as possible.

In Germany the solder made use of in sealing the cans is not allowed to contain over 10 per cent of lead, while in this country the analysis of numerous samples of the solder applied shows that it contains fully 50 per cent of lead, in addition to this being the lack of care to prevent such solder from coming into contact with the contents of the can. and large surfaces of solder on the seams are often found exposed to the action of Guire's Crossroads and always tuk the the acid contents of the can.

> Why the Tombs Were Rifled. The reporter of the time of Rameses

IX does not take note of the walking delegate, though strikes were numerous then among the Theban workmen. As laborers were paid in food, the contractors were often behind with their supplies. Erwin writes that "it is one of the acknowledged characteristics of modern Egypt that payments can never be made without delays; so also in old Egypt the same routine seems to have been followed out with respect to payments in kind." To build or keep the tombs and monuments of the dead in good order must have required a vast umber of workmen.

If they were not paid and were starying, familiarity with the mortal remains of the great and the property stored away in mummy cases had made these workmen indifferent to the idea of there being any peculiar kind of sacrilege in committing robbery. That accounts, so think many authorities, why so many eventually by the most serious consectombs have been rifled. Probably for that reason were built those vast masses other trying diseases well known to of stone, with narrow passages, so as to physicians being the direct effects of guard an entrance from thieves. But continual exposure of the system to any precautions extending over thousands of years are impossible. If the thief of one generation was foiled, his descendants were more enterprising or expert, or, maybe, curious. Bearing this in mind, the more remarkable are the recent finds made by M. de Morgan at Dachonar.
